

Walnut Mountain House Self-Guided Walk

1

of six stops

Walnut Mountain has long been known for its views from the mountain top.

Read more Walnut Mountain House history in the lighted window of the Liberty Museum & Arts Center, 46 South Main Street,
in downtown Liberty!

Walnut Mountain House

Self-Guided Walk

2

of six stops

In the 1896 issue of Summer Homes published by the O&W Railway, the listing for the Walnut Mountain House included the fact that it was one mile from the Liberty train station. “[A] private conveyance... will meet guests. A drive of twenty minutes over a smooth, winding roadway brings you to the Mountain House...”

The carriage road still leads visitors to the mountain top...keep going to find stop number 3.

Walnut Mountain House Self-Guided Walk

3

of six stops

Witch's Rock is still poised above the carriage road where hikers often pose for a photo with her profile.

Read more Walnut Mountain House history in the lighted window of the Liberty Museum & Arts Center, 46 South Main Street,
in downtown Liberty!

Walnut Mountain House Self-Guided Walk

4

of six stops

The Walnut Mountain House was an attraction for young and old alike to enjoy the fresh air and sunshine of the countryside.

Notice the side profile (Witches' Face) just under the feet of Mountain House Patrons.

Read more Walnut Mountain House history in the lighted window of the Liberty Museum & Arts Center, 46 South Main Street,
in downtown Liberty!

Walnut Mountain House

Self-Guided Walk

5

of six stops

We know from the Sanborn fire map of the Walnut Mountain House that there was a spring that pumped water to an elevated tank, and a small hydrant was located in the yard.

Walnut Mountain House Self-Guided Walk

6

of six...
you're here!

The construction crew of the Walnut Mountain House included local men & women, here with their tools. Three people in this photo have been identified.

Read more Walnut Mountain House history in the lighted window of the Liberty Museum & Arts Center, 46 South Main Street, in downtown Liberty!